Nightly News

Week of 11/8th

This week, Nightly News aired a series of reports on women's health. In tonight's report, NBC's Chief Science Correspondent Robert Bazell looks at new research which may help eradicate cervical cancer, a disease that strikes 10,000 U.S. women each year and kills approximately 4,000 patients each year. Bazell will report on a new vaccine that is being tested which may block one strain of the human papilloma virus, a major cause of cervical cancer.

Other topics this week will include: a diet pill that may also help patients stop smoking; a look at whether there could be dangerous side effects of vitamin e; and a report on new research in the use of radiation to treat breast cancer that may be much more convenient for patients.

Connecting With Kids

10/23/04

Research shows 60% of American high school girls are dissatisfied with their bodies and on a diet. Eating disorders have tripled since the 1960s, and cosmetic surgery among teenagers has more than doubled in the past year alone. Why are so many kids so unhappy with what they see in the mirror? Experts say one reason is the barrage of images bombarding teens everyday—images of thinness, beauty and perfection. "It makes girls feel as if they're not good enough," says 16-year-old Laura Walter, "if they're not perfect."

For most kids, the dissatisfaction is minor and passing. But for some, it can lead to dangerous illnesses like anorexia, bulimia and body dysmorphic disorder. Parents can help by explaining how marketing works, how advertisers use images to create dissatisfaction, and also by reminding children that what really matters is not what they look like, but who they are inside.
